Designed from the ground up as an assasin's weapon, it has two seperate barrels, and is designed to kill a single victim at close range. The outside is unremarkable, and mechanically it is simple and straightforward. It is designed to be easily concelable and easy to draw out of a pocket or such. The greatest feature is it's special 7.62 mm silent rounds. An internal piston both drives the shot foreward, and traps the propellant gasses inside, totaly eliminating the noise, flash, and smoke associated with other weapons. The result is a truly silent shot. The case does not get ejected from the gun, keeping it's secret ammunition's technology safe. Another great feature is the fact that it uses the same size ammunition as the AK-47 assault rifle, and the barrels of the two guns are exactly the same. This leads investigators to belive that the man was killed by the AK-47 at long range, due to speed of impact, and not the close-range MSP.

This strange revolver, built sometime in the 1990s, is chambered for the 9 mm Parabellum cartridge and it's six round cylinder is hinged at the top of the frame rather than the bottom. The M207's hexagonal barrel is lined up with the bottom-most chamber for greater accuracy and the weapon's strange design is counter-balanced by a top mounted weight. It should be noted that the Mateba's greatest feature is its accuracy. Unfortunately, it is not as quick or as high powered as most automatics. Additionally, its design causes problems with loading, making it less than an ideal choice in situations where a lot of ammo is being expended. Features ergonomic grips and interchangeable barrels.

Originally a joint design between Daewoo and the American company of Atchisson, the USAS-12 was classified as a Class III destructive device in the US and Atchisson dropped out of the partnership, feeling there would be little or no US sales. The original design was the Daewoo/Atchisson AA-12 Assault Shotgun, a selective fire shotgun designed to fire standard as well as exotic ammunition. This was later modified by Daewoo in the hopes of US sales and renamed the USAS-12, but the large ammunition capacity of the magazines dashed hopes of this too. Both weapons can be fed by large capacity box or drum magazines. The weapon is designed like an assault rifle, and bears a superficial resemblance to the M-16. The low rate of fire helps keep recoil low, especially during automatic fire.

A dual purpose missile launcher from Arasaka. For anti-tank purposes the fired missile is wire guided to target, but for anti-aircraft purposes the weapon introduces an entirely new device. Its called the VITA system, the missile itself has a small camera mounted to it, which transmits the video back to the weapon's eyepiece. The weapon controls the missile by remote though controls added to the weapons grips. What it all boils down to is that if you can play a simple video game you can hit your target. The computer, reciever, and other electronics for this system are stored in a small box about the size of a gas can, and are jacked into the weapon prior to it being fired.

This pocket sized 14 mm is possibly the most dangerous handgun ever made, to the user as well as the target. Avec le Piranha, Colt veut concurrencer Malorian sur son propre terrain. Il est moins cher, plus précis et va faire des heureux parmi les amateurs de flingues "plus c'est gros mieux c'est". Son seul gros défaut vient de son canon très long qui n'arrange pas sa maniabilité.

Drop that full borg, or stop that mack truck in its tracks. This gun fires the same 10 mm rifle shell used in the Arasaka Morita and packs one hell of a wallop. Its short barrel design and heavy load make for an extremely well felt recoil, so accuracy is a little troublesome, but the power of this gun, combined with its concealability make it extremely popular with borg hunters and C-SWAT officers.

This is truly the biggest of the big man portable guns you are likely to ever find. This weapon is impossible to fire without a gyrostabilizer mount and at least a body of 10, at least if you want to survive the experience. Most commonly this weapon is used by full conversions or mounted to an ACPA or linear frame, however recently the weapon has been issued to special forces teams (along with an improved version of the same powered gyrostabilizer mount used on the EMG-85 railgun). Anything short of a battleship hit with this weapon will most likely be destroyed. Any human attemtping to fire this weapon without a gyro stabilization mount will take 1d6+2 points of bruise damage regardless of body type, any human with a bod of 10 or lower (15 without the powered gyro-stabilization mount) firing this weapon must also roll a ten sided die, on a 5 or lower his shoulder is shattered. Also without a stabilization mount, any human firing the weapon, regardless of BOD will be flung back wards 2D6 feet unless thouroughly braced.

Arasaka X-LR-62 Laser Rifle
Type : Laser rifle Accuracy : +3 Availability : Rare Concealability : Non concealable Magazine : Différe selon la puissance Rate of fire : 1	Cartridge : battery (*) Reliability : standard Range : 400 meters Cost : 112795 eb Description : Datafortress 2020 Length : 120 cm Country : Japan
A new man-portable laser rifle has emerged on the battlefeild. What makes this model different is its limited power selector which only includes 3 settings. The first is light and it does 3d6 damage and has can achieve up to one hundred shots with the standard battery belt, or a virtually unlimited amount if plugged into a wall socket or sufficient generator, this is made possible by the electric recherging and amplifying cylider attached to the gun which acts much like a car's alternator. On the second setting, medium, you get a total of 30 seconds before the power is drained from the weapon. The last setting is heavy, and it gives one 3 second burst of 10D6 damage and then the gun is completely drained. However, due to the special "alternator" built into the weapon, recharging from a wall socket takes half the time as a normal laser although until the weapon is fully charged again it cannot be used, even on the light setting. Due to the rarity and extreme cost of the weapon, supplies are very limited, (no more than 5 to a customer) and orders must be paid in advance.
