Longarm	5	This purely counter-terrorist group replaced the Buzo Tactico after the overthrow of the military junta. Though a military unit (most of the members coming from the parachute brigade), this unit is responsible for all domestic CT operations and has limited police powers. As with other units of this type, training with foreign advisors is quite common (France, Israel, and South Africa being the most common). Requires Airborne package.

Like most of South America, the Argentine police are ineffective, largely corrupt, and prone to ending situations with gun play. They receive a surprising amount of riot control training, and often have the opportunity to put it to work. Because of their abuse of power during the junta, they are not trusted by the populace.
