The military rules daily life in North Korea (or at least that is what the West thinks). Training of the common soldier is basic and brutal.

Twenty-two brigades, or over 80,000 troops, make up the North Korean Special Forces (unsure of local name). The primary function of the special forces is as elite light infantry, though some units specialize in covert cross-border operations.

Options - The package listed covers only the standard skills, some units and men are highly trained in mountain warfare and/or water-borne operations (Scuba and small boat handling).

Tasked more with maintaining order than with upholding the law, these are brutal unapproachable men.

Note - I am unsure whether the National Police are part of the military or not, but either way it should not effect the package.
