This supplement was conceived in 2010 as the nighttime companion to Matt Finch's now classic City Encounters. Its original scope was a Knockspell article, which eventually grew into the idea of a larger joint product, and – as it happens with over-ambitious projects – fell through the cracks. Meanwhile, the table had seen a lot of playtesting, and a Hungarian edition with expanded content was released in 2011. The present booklet integrates the two editions, as well as supplementary tables both old and new.

The supplement's purpose is to provide thought-provoking material for an ongoing city campaign. It can be used to generate “connective tissue” between scenarios of your own devising, or to strike a spark of inspiration if the characters go off carousing or looking for easy money in unfamiliar territory. Ideas are deliberately left vague and open-ended for adaptability, customisation and – if needed – further development. However, The Nocturnal Table can also be used as a basis for developing more complex situations: a few such uses are suggested in this booklet, but the possibilities are no doubt even broader. Trust your imagination, see what the dice come up with, and keep things rolling. The rest will follow naturally.

THE NOCTURNAL TABLE

This is a table to generate night-time encounters for a large, sinful and vaguely oriental city – a place of golden minarets, crumbling tenements and sinister aspirations. The following considerations apply:

- Several entries call for additional percentile rolls to introduce complications and variety. These possibilities are usually mutually exclusive.
- Common NPC types can be found in Appendix A for fast reference. Only NPCs with notably different capabilities are detailed in the table entries, and only exceptional ability scores and items of particular interest are noted.
- Used in conjunction with the general tables in the previous section, it is probably most sensible to give a 1:3 probability for each random encounter at night to come from this table.
- Sometimes, a random roll may be used as a quick method to provoke the players and start the action, or to complicate things a bit if everything is all too obvious (although this should always be done with forethought).
- Random entries are also useful to quickly establish the feel and contents of a neighbourhood, as a compendium of people to find in the city, or a handful of rolls can be used to generate a mini-scenario (a more complex use is outlined in Appendix B). Encounter numbers can be jotted down (keyed) directly on the GM's map for later reference.

In the end, many of the encounters here are similar to threads: they may start on this table, but where they lead someone who takes them up and starts to follow – you and your players tell us!

100 Academic Lucius (Fighter 2, cane sword, poison) and 1d10 assistant guards (Fighter 2) making a survey of nocturnal street illumination for detailed annual report. 01-80 flies into uncontrollable rage if diverted in any manner.

101 Academic Melchiades of Pentastadion (Fighter 1) and merchant Ratoglek Gorp (Thief 4), returning from bacchanalian feast with 1d6 veteran guards (Fighter 3), and discussing the merits of candied jellyfish. 01-10 one falls dead from exotic but poisonous treat.

102 Academic Ninax the Geographer, mortified that the world outside his study doesn't conform to his theories, requests escort home for 1d6*5 gp reward and bonus treasure map. 01-80 pure conjecture.

APPENDIX B: THE CONSPIRACY

This section describes a more complex use for The Nocturnal Table, and other random city generation tables. Individually, encounters represent local colour, or the beginnings of mini-adventures. By placing three or four next to each other – whether by design or chance – the result is often an adventure that can fill much of a session. Yet cities are even more complex...

The Conspiracy is a simple, play-friendly method to describe interaction and conflict between city-based interest groups or conspiracies. In essence, the nexus points of a pre-drawn, blank “connection network” are populated with random or semi-random encounters, and once finished, a coherent design is created around the existing network.

The resulting network has multiple benefits. It shows who is associated with whom, and it also shows which way clues lead from one point to the next while the characters are investigating the network. The links can, furthermore, represent command structures, dependencies, and especially the conduit of information. They can be one-sided (marked with an arrow) or mutual. Stronger links may be marked with bold lines, and weak, tentative ones with dashed ones. Some connections can be dead ends, but important nodes – the „heart” of the conspiracy – should be located close to the centre, approachable from multiple directions. The deeper details of a network usually follow logically from the connected nexus points.

These networks are individually fairly simple, but they are often well hidden, and a large city has several of them. They are often connected, too – but how? Does it all form an enormous spider web, with a particularly clever conspirator pulling all the strings? A hierarchy, with a leader or group on top of the all-seeing pyramid? A matrix that seemingly leads nowhere? Or multiple networks vying for power and influence? All configurations have their potential in the game.

Example: The Gamemaster wishes to develop a conspiracy centred around Prince Alkor, a double-dealing aristocrat. Selecting the second basic layout, he rolls up seven encounters...

- 137 Bricks fallen from a nearby wall are all stamped with the mark of a cat’s eye, reveal entrance to forgotten part of house sealed up long ago.
- 151 City guards: 1d4*5 militias (Fighter 1) battering down tenement door, suspected tax-dodgers.
- 212 Hermit, an animalistic, nameless wreck, digging in street garbage. Cursed priest.
- 239 Mob: 2d4*10 men looting neighbourhood
- 312 Robbers: Yusuf Muraad Khusi (Illusionist 4) and 2d6 robbers (Fighter 2); the hunchbacked Yusuf, hiding in a curtained hiding place, creates the illusion of several more companions surrounding locale.
- 110 Alchemist Multiphage of Lam (Illusionist 6) selling 1d6+1 potions from beaker of potions (01-40 delusion); also provides horoscopes (all ambiguous)
- 356 Thief Smardis (Thief 4, deep blue turban, 4*opium), smoking a hookah and offering empty tower apartment for sale at 140 gp.

With some more rolling and interpretation, the random entries yield a decent criminal enterprise. It appears that Alkoor's game is to expropriate plebeians through aggressive tax-collection (151), as well as inciting looters in the slum areas (239). He buys up properties on the cheap, and sells them through one of his agents, a skilled thief named Smardis (356). Alkoor is mostly careful to work through intermediaries, a loyal robber gang (312), placing his orders in a secret meeting room in a sealed house (137). However, a more immediate connection can also be established via the City Guard – perhaps he has been stepping up the collection efforts and leaning on the officials. This is only part of his racket, though – and perhaps an entirely lawful one! We have two more entries to consider. It seems Alkoor is related to a nameless pariah (212), who could be a victim or a secret associate – the GM elects to make him an effective spy most characters would not suspect. Finally, the alchemist and potion-seller (110) is tentatively connected to both of Alkoor's main activities, without being linked to the robber gang. Perhaps he is not even a formal part of the network – just someone who had made a fateful connection, and can offer the important information that the two activities are somehow connected... or someone who'd had his own fingers in the pie, but is now in over his head.

And how does it all unfold? Does Alkoor end up losing his head, or does he have an offer the players can't refuse? Are those connections with the robbers and the City Guard good enough to hound the company out of the city before they jeopardise a perfectly good get-richer scheme? Well... The conspiracy described above should serve as a sufficient framework to provide the right kind of pointers, and let the characters connect the dots on their own. The adventure can take the shape of a mission, or arise spontaneously from the logic of the campaign: in any event, minor puzzle pieces can form a pattern; and patterns, a grander design.

Conventions

While much of old-school gaming originates from the same lineage, and its products remain largely cross-compatible, there is much devil in those details. Every table and every party has its own ideas and house rules, and it is a good idea to lay these assumptions out into the open. Therefore, the conventions governing this supplement are thus:

- Unless otherwise noted, the materials published here were designed for Advanced rules.
- A thousand gold pieces is worth a small fortune. Monetary treasure is relatively scarce.
- Conversely, XP for treasure is gained through squandering it in hedonistic excess (or any kind of lavish spending which has no discernible benefit), with a 5 multiplier. If you adjust the treasure values, adjust the multiplier as well.
- Level demographics form a very flat pyramid: low-level NPCs (1st to 4th level) are commonplace, while mid-level ones (5th to 8th level) tend to be outliers – present in most communities, but never numerous. Few NPCs reach more than 9th level, and over 12th is almost unheard of.
- Magic is limited to 5th level spells or lower. Magic items are limited to +3.
- Fighters can do carryover damage: when fighting grouped opponents, the damage remaining after a killing blow is transferred to the next opponent.
- Roll-under morale is in effect (see Morale & Men in Echoes #01).
- The gods are limited in their powers, but actively involved in the fate of the world.

The Nocturnal Table

The City is a maze. A labyrinth of alleyways, plazas, shortcuts and hidden thoroughfares, it isn't any less treacherous to navigate than a dungeon. At least during the day, the worst one can expect is a greedy patrol of guards eager for a shakedown, or a thief in the crowd, ready to make a grab and run for it. At night, the sensible and the timid hurry home and bolt their doors. Ecstatic revellers, madmen, assassins, religious fanatics, thrill-seekers, enigmatic apparitions and tiger-headed opium nightmares prowl the streets. And the guards are still not helping.

The Nocturnal Table is a supplement intended to bring you this city by way of an encounter system, random inspiration tables, NPC and monster statistics, as well as a giant nighttime random encounter table, whose three hundred entries can serve as interludes as well as springboards for complicated investigative scenarios and fantastic conspiracies.
