

This kit is geared to make your job as a Palladium Game Master easier and to help you promote Palladium Books. This kit includes the following:

- Game Master Reference Sheet – This is a cheat sheet for the Game Master. Vital Game Master information is available at your fingertips.
- Rifts Combat Matrix – This useful Game Master aid will allow you to streamline combat in your game, organize initiative rolls and easily keep track of number of attacks.
- Rifts Skill List – Need to look up a skill percentage or even W.P. bonuses? This is not only a useful Game Master tool, but an excellent aid when creating characters.
- Alphabetized Spell Sheet – This quick reference for magic users lists all spells that are currently in print in the Rifts Book of Magic, along with the page number. Again, this is another dual purpose aid for both Game Masters and players.
- 'Borg Worksheet – Need to design a 'Borg as a pre-generated character? These worksheets allow you to customize your 'Borg character and easily keep track of all of the 'Borg's cybernetic and bionic enhancements.
- Rifts Mini-Posters – The mini-posters can be used to advertise the game you are running at your local store or convention. Post them at your table or where allowed at the convention. Finally, if anyone is interested in receiving Weekly Updates and Press Releases from Palladium, have them write down their email addresses and pass the list along to Palladium Books.
- Rifts Character Sheets & G.M. Logs – These are the classic character sheets, G.M. Experience Log, Mercenary Company Sheet, Robot Combat/Vehicle Log and Traveling Show Creation Sheet. They're up on our website, but we thought we'd save you some time and include them here.
- Rifts Sample Characters – 20 complete characters to hand out to players, use as NPCs, etc.

Rifts® Combat Matrix

The Rifts® Combat Matrix is a combination chart for keeping track of individual attacks and the number of melees, and a quick reference tool for the Game Master. Combat is somewhat inevitable in most games and keeping all the information organized can be a daunting task to newer Game Masters. Well now with the Rifts Combat Matrix, battles can flow a bit more smoothly.

Top of the Combat Matrix

Character/N.P.C. Name	Initiative Roll	Perception Bonus	I.F. Size	Magic Size	Power Size	Position or Distance	Prey	Detect Ambush	Detect Concealment

The top of the matrix has a section to list the names of all of the Player Characters, NPCs and villains or monsters. Write all the names down then when combat is expected, write down each character's initiative in the “Initiative Roll” column. The remaining columns are reference information for the Game Master. You might want to collect this information ahead of time from the players. Sometimes it adds a little suspense to a game if a player doesn't know what he or she is rolling for. For example, if the players are in a seedy bar known for pick pockets and one of the players is “accidentally” bumped into by a patron, and I tell the player to make a Perception Roll and the roll is pathetic, the player knows the character probably had his pocket picked. On the other hand, if we replay that last scene and I just tell the player to roll me a D20 and the roll is low, then I just tell him "a guy just brushed by you on the way out," or if the player rolls very high, then I say "a guy brushed by you on the way out and you see him quickly putting something the size of a Universal Credit Card in his pocket and when you check, yours is missing!" Another example is the ambush. What surprise is it to the player if a G.M. tells the players to roll their Detect Ambush skill? Gee, could an ambush be coming? On the other hand, the Game Master can just tell his players to roll percentile dice. Those who make the roll see a glint of a gun barrel reflecting in the distance, while those who fail may lose initiative and their first melee attack. In the end, Game Masters, you should do what works best for you. Use this information as you see fit for your game.

The remainder of the combat matrix is to keep track of melees and melee attacks. After initiative has been rolled, write down from first to last your initiative order next to the first set of boxes.

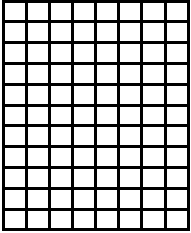

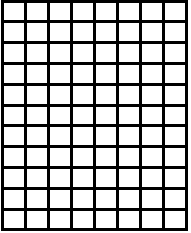

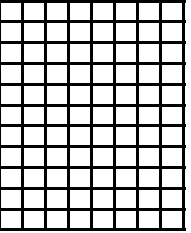

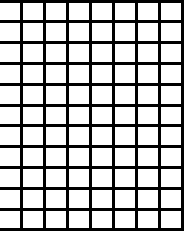

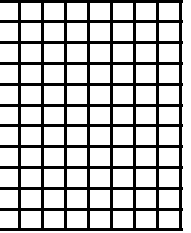

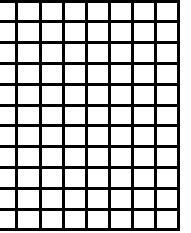

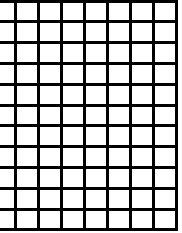

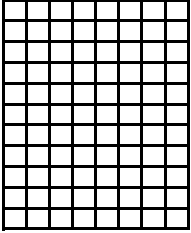

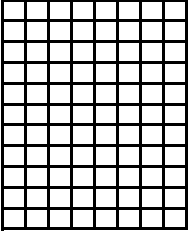

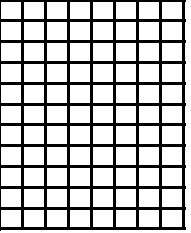

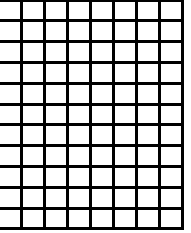

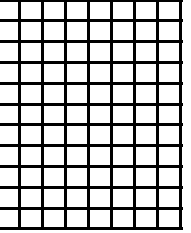

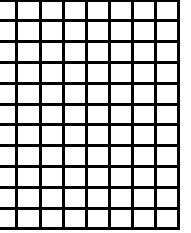

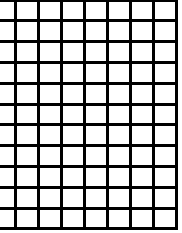

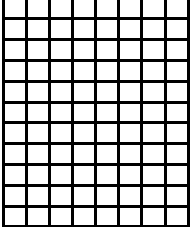

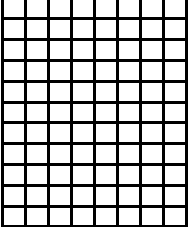

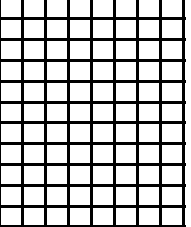

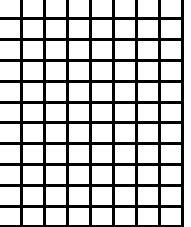

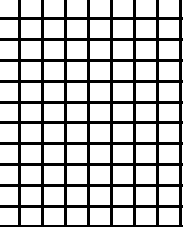

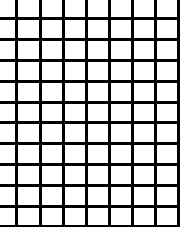

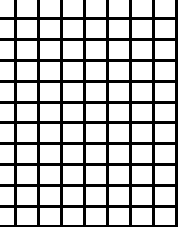

Character/N.P.C. Name	Melee

The boxes next to each name represent attacks per melee. The average character will have 5 to 7 attacks per melee. Starting at the top of the list and working your way down, place a slash in the first box to indicate that the character has used his first melee attack. In some instances, characters may be put on the defensive and may have to use several of their attacks dodging. As each melee attack is used, place a slash in the next box. For characters who have more than 8 melee attacks, just make a slash going in the other direction so you have an “X” in the box. Finally, I also find it useful for keeping track of when magic users cast their spells. If the character decides to go for a high level spell and it is going to take three attacks to cast, I'll mark the first two boxes with slashes and the third box with an “S” so I know that the character's spell is going to be cast on that attack. It is also useful for determine the duration of spells. If a character is caught in a Magic Net spell and is trying to cut his way out, I can plot it out on the matrix to let me know when he has finally cut his way free.

Each melee round has its own set of boxes to represent numerous characters.

“Bad, Bad” Terrence Clay

Terrence Clay was the 13th of 14 children born to a poor farmer in Kentucky. When Terrence was 12, his father (to rid himself of one more mouth to feed) indentured Terrence off to a traveling magician. This magician was a Shifter in need of a servant/assistant to tend to his daily needs (such as cooking and cleaning). Although many of Terrence’s chores were menial, the mage did pass on much of his magic knowledge to Terrence. Eventually, the mage met his demise due to summoning something that disagreed with him and Terrence suddenly found himself free.

Since then, he has followed the path of his mentor as a freelance Shifter. It is unknown who first gave him the nickname of “Bad, Bad Terrence Clay.”

Alignment: Anarchist.

Yhabbayar Axe: An extremely rare (possibly unique) item given to Bob by a Yhabbayar whose life he once saved. However, the axe is unstable and, although the axe is enchanted to create magic and/or psionic bubbles, it creates them randomly. The wielder himself never knows what bubble(s) will appear until after he activates the axe. Targets get to save vs either magic or psionics (depending upon the specific bubble). Roll percentile:

01-08 Thunderclap (magic).

09-15 Magic Pigeon (magic - upon touching someone, this bubble will vanish and be replaced by a mystic facsimile of a pigeon which will fly around the person who is touched until it receives a message to deliver. It will then fly away to deliver its message.).

16-23 Lantern Light (magic - the light will be under the control of the axe wielder).

24-30 Create Zombie (magic - whomever is touched will become a zombie for 1D6 hours).

31-38 Fist of Fury (magic - upon touching someone, this bubble will vanish and be replaced by a glowing red fist which will attack, doing 1D6 damage, twice per round for 1D6 rounds).

39-45 Commune with Spirits (magic - allows whomever is touched to see and speak with all types of Entities).

46-53 Levitation (psionic - affects up to 1D6 x 10 lbs/4.5 kg).

Erik Lovatt

Erik Lovatt was born and raised in New York State (not too far away from Madhaven). Eventually, Erik's parents grew tired of being so close to the terrible city of Madhaven and headed west to Chi-Town. The 'Burbs were as far as they got. Sadly, both of Erik's parents eventually died, never having been allowed citizenship into Chi-Town. Erik decided to spend the rest of his life helping others who were unable to overcome this cruel system. Since he needed some way of supporting himself, Erik became a Juicer, figuring that life was short anyway so he might as well make his a memorable one.

Jason Ingoldsby

Jason Ingoldsby was born in Chi-Town to a fairly affluent family. Family connections (plus Jason's own talents) ultimately earned Jason a commission in the Coalition States Army. Although Jason served diligently (albeit without notable distinction) for several years, an incident involving the slaughter of some helpless humans (who were merely suspected of abetting some D-Bees) soured him on military life. Jason resigned his commission and has been a freelance adventurer ever since.

John Bennett

John Bennett's Glitter Boy armor has been in his family for four generations. After John inherited the armor, he used it to become an enforcer for the local Black Market. However, despite having to go heavy on the muscle at times in his job, there was a line that John would not cross.

After John stood up and protected one of his assigned targets from his gangster bosses, John decided that even with the protection of his armor, a change of location on his part would be advantageous to his continued good health.

Since then, John has been traveling about hiring himself out as a mercenary to whomever is willing to pay him well and not ask him to do anything that he can't stomach.

Roger Howard

Roger was born to a noble family in a small kingdom. However, despite being raised to wealth and privilege, Roger always felt that something was missing in his life; that he was somehow destined for bigger things.

When his psionic abilities first manifested, Roger felt that it was his destiny to go out into the world and make a name for himself. He discussed this with his king (who happened to be a distant cousin of his), and it was decided that Roger would go out to see the world. After honing his abilities and gaining valuable experience, Roger would eventually return home to a position of power and prestige as one of the king's advisors. For now, Roger travels about in search of new experiences and challenges.

Salan-Garv

Salan-Garv is originally from the Eastern Woods (specifically, the area known in pre-Cataclysmic times as New England). After being enthralled by tales from the tribal elders about the Coalition (a mighty kingdom to the west that treated Stalkers with great respect), Salan decided to see this place for himself. After finding out that the stories about how well Stalkers were treated were not true, Salan decided not to join up with the Coalition after all. However, there are so many new things here to see, he is planning to remain a while longer before returning home. While he is here, he is open to trying new experiences and getting in new adventures.

Shawna Greene

Shawna Greene grew up in the 'Burbs of Chi-Town. In an effort to survive the mean streets, she hooked up with a gang. Running with this gang brought her to the attention of a local criminal (who turned out to be a magician). In exchange for running errands and ferreting out information for him, he started to teach her magic.

However, before Shawna got past the rudiments of magic, her mentor was killed in a CS sweep of the 'Burb. Since it was known that Shawna was an associate of the now-dead mage, she fled the area before the Coalition came after her. Ever since then, she has wandered about as a freelancer for hire (picking up some additional skills and magic along the way).

Shima Rintaro

Shima Rintaro was born to a Samurai family in the New Empire of Japan. Unlike most of his friends and comrades who were content never to leave the Empire, Shima always had a curiosity about the outside world. Figuring that such knowledge and experience would make Shima a better retainer, his Daimyo granted Shima leave to explore the world on condition that after seven years, or whenever Shima felt that he had learned (or experienced) enough, Shima would return to take his place in the Daimyo's service. One of the Clan's magicians opened up a Rift which sent Shima to North America, where he has been adventuring the past several years.

Stalking Wolf

On the Cree tribal lands, Stalking Wolf had heard many tales of wonder about the lands to the south. Finally, his curiosity got the better of him and Stalking Wolf left his people to see for himself if these tales were true. He figures that when he finally returns, he will have some interesting stories of his own to tell.

Strong Arrow

As a Spirit Warrior in good standing, Strong Arrow was content to live among his people, the Mohawks. However, when the tribe's chief shaman had a vision that could only be answered by warriors who were willing to go on the vision quest, Strong Arrow had no alternative other than to join the quest. In his heart, Strong Arrow knows that someday he will return to his people, but for now, he will follow wherever the spirits may lead him.
