THE SIEGE OF HØNEYDAR

The city of Høneydar was under siege from rebelling Melurian's for over a Varin, but because of the bad coordination of the Melurian forces the siege was never complete and the sea-ways was still open and supplies could be brought in from nearby Calarna.

The brave defenders of the city managed to hold out with few losses until the reinforcements came from Arx Metosud and Esov Mur and then the Melurian forces was broken and driven back across the river Yardæn.

Fighting continues throughout the month in the Yardæn area and into Meluria, but the Melurian forces are on steady retreat and are being handled by the forces from Høneydar.

The Siege of Høneydar

Guard of Høneydar Astonished!

The guard Intenol of Hyiern was astonished when the proud knights from the south rode in as liberators from the terrible siege, he says

"These guys smashed the siege in one blow and made the bastards beg for mercy while they were passing! And then I saw one of the knights ride of again into there battle and simply grab one of the bad guys nobles and put him over the saddle like a bad child, then he rode back and handed him over to his squire... Yeez, with guys like that in our lines who can beat us?" Say the battle bruised guardsman at Høneydar's gate.

BATTLE OF THE BRAVE

A handful of knights, militia and Esov Murian volunteers managed to hold of the bulk of the Melurian rebel force.

Baron Sevi alone held the enemy army during the first day's battle only aided by militia and a handful of soldiers and knights. Despite heavy losses they would not budge an inch and the next day Baron Turin came with additional support troops.

Together they held of several more attacks from the numerically superior Melurian rebel force for another day until Lord Vannis Bourne could relive them with the bulk of the Dukes forces and drive the rebels back to their reinforcements around Høneydar.

Without any rest Lord Vannis Bourne drives the army north to free the besieged in Høneydar.

LIBERATOR OF HÆNEYDAR

Lord Vannis Bourne, Marquess Ormaal managed in the end of the summer to break the siege of Hæneydar in several days of intense fighting, with the aid of Tribune Argus Nolara, force marching two cohorts to Hæneydar from Arx Metosud.

In ceremonies after the liberation of the city, Marquess Ormaal was decorated as Liberator of Hæneydar, the highest decoration of the battle, and for bravery. Ser Des-Mon of Turin and young Ser Barritus Trebain domo Esiv was decorated as Heroes of the City and the former also for bravery with Tribune Argus Nolara.

After the battle there was almost a week of celebrations in the city, dedicated to the heroes of the battle, and the Marquess was personally showing his gratitude to those that aided in the liberation of the city.

LEGION AIDING HÆNEYDAR

Tribune Argus Nolara has gracefully accepted to be interviewed by the Esov Enquirer, and we are happy to be able to publish an exclusive report on our brave legions activities during the final hours of the battle of Hæneydar. “I received a request for assistance from my old friend Lord Giles Kondiis, Marquess of Hæneydar. My forces made the preparations to stabilize the Y'kin situation for a few days to allow two cohorts to hurry in assisting the loyal servants of the Empire. Hastily marching for two days we reach the site of the battle. The civilian forces, knowing of our impending arrival, had broken out of the city and were fighting a pitched battle in the fields just outside. They were fighting a good fight, and I must tell you that some of their knights I would not mind having on my side in any fight! Nevertheless, they were outnumbered and out-matched. The Melurian's are strong individual fighters, and the civilian army had too much militia to be able to perform as well as the peers would have wished. Strong individually, but undisciplined, that is a fair assessment of the Melurian's. As has been shown time and time again, undisciplined troops of any kind, no matter how strong, are no match to the skill, training and discipline of the Imperial Legions. We entered the battle in standard formation and there was at no time any doubts as to the outcome of the battle. After destroying the Melurian rebels we set a light camp to march back in the morning.”

ABOUT HÆNEYDAR

Hæneydar (R: ‘Hidden Coves’) is a southern Marquessate, ruled by Lord Gyles Kondiis. It is encompassing the north-eastern coast of the Bay of Ormian and the land around the river Yardæen, which empties into the bay. It earns its name not because of the vast caverns under the western knees of the Grey Mountains, but because of countless grottoes carved out of the cliffs which dominate the coast. Also inside the Marquessate is the isle of Calærmian (R: ‘Singing Sister’)

Hæneydar is considered the gate to Meluria by many and is a busy trade port.

The fort of Hæneydar (Arx Yardæen) is the strongest fortification in all of the bay of Ormian; it was built in 5.912 after a Melurian attack.
