The World's Firearm Catalog—Without Ares

There are those that think any weapon worth owning is produced by the UCAS megacorporation Ares. Perhaps as a statement of just how willing we are to kill each other, however, there are numerous other manufacturers that provide equally lethal options. Nearly every AA or AAA corporation owns at least a small-arms manufacturer, as the Sixth World has a growing need for more weapons, and the corps want the ability to gain windfall profits from desperate purchasers when the opportunities arise.

Shiawase, Renraku, and Saedder-Krupp produce quarterly catalogs similar to the more widely known Ares product, but their efforts have yet to be widely commented on by the shadow community. Cavalier Arms is developing into a brand known for its reliable, if uninspired, designs, but its products are still largely only sold in North America. The availability of these weapons varies considerably based on the location of the manufacturer and the vigor with which it monitors its support channel. These are the weapons you should expect to see on the streets and battle zones near you over the next year or so.

IZOM APHRODITE

40-ROUND MAGAZINE

IZOM APHRODITE

The Aphrodite is one of our newest designs, featuring caseless ammunition and an electronic firing system. The weapon system is designed to be integrated into a police officer's tactical suite, allowing the purchaser to add or remove accessories as needed. The Aphrodite features a fully supported infrastructure, with Izom's Reissuance Warrantee for those weapons that fail to pass our rigorous annual post-sale inspection program.

The short-barreled grenade launcher was an addition requested by mercenaries who received the weapon during Desert Wars Mojave 2071. It functions as a breaching tool more than a tactical weapon since the reduced barrel length ensures easy portability and reduced weight, but range suffers commensurately. Several purchasers have also found the under-barrel accessory useful in the delivery of non-lethal munitions in urban environments.

Standard Upgrades/Accessories: Barrel Reduction (Grenade Launcher only), Electronic Firing, Folding Stock

GRENADE	—	SS	—	1(M)	—	—

- Izom fails to mention the best place to get these babies is to pick one up after it has failed the inspection program. They drop them onto the grey markets as a liquidation item. Just another way the corps makes money off the little guy.
- Cosmo
- I would recommend a thorough check before using such items; the quality control for the refurbishing shop is less strict than the manufacturing system.
- Black Mamba
- Some people here might be surprised at the grenade launcher's shorter range. The weapon was designed for close-quarter combat drills by police agencies, not the long-range battle militaries prefer.
- Picador
- Perfect for jungles, both natural and concrete.

IZOM SS-374

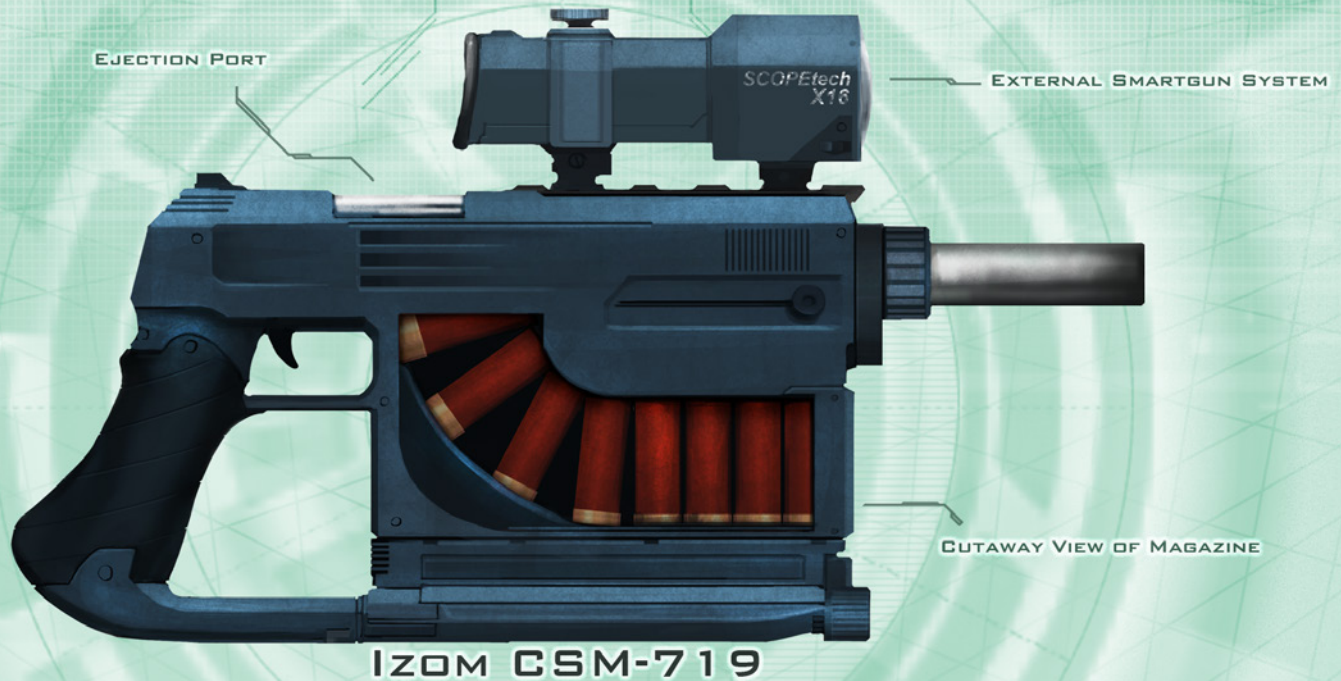

The SS-374 is a redesign of the classic pump-action shotgun. Our ergonomic enhancement team has attempted to add features that all metahumans will find comfortable while retaining the feel that aficionados have come to expect. The SS-374 features a side-loading tube magazine mounted above the pump action, eliminating the danger of rough use damaging the weapon's functionality. The weapon's advanced safety features and cartridge ignition system ensure the weapon will not discharge when dropped, and its rugged construction will endear itself to operators who take it into less-than-pristine environments.

- This thing is more of a joke than a weapon. A Defiance T-250 is everything this shotgun is and it doesn't have fancy gizmos to mess up the firing sequence. Simplicity is the best answer.
- Riser
- The Izom brand is manufactured and heavily marketed in Europe. It's always good to know what the locals are likely to have, either so you can plan against it or to blend in.
- Fianchetto

IZOM CSM-719

IZOM CSM-419

The CSM-419 is a large-capacity shotgun intended for law enforcement and paramilitary organizations that require an edge in close-quarter battle scenarios. The weapon features advanced sighting aids as well as an integrated safety system and complete electronic control of the feed mechanism. The primary action is recoil-operated to ensure reliability when technomancer threats may be nearby. The unique Compact Carry® magazines mesh with the weapon's firmware and form a portion of the weapon's rugged structure.

The CSM-419 has recently participated in approval trials for MET-2000 and Wuxing Worldwide Shipping. While the results of these trials have yet to be made public, the inputs received to date has led to product improvements that will be seen in future production runs. Izom's continued goal of excellence is visible in all of our products.

IZOM CSM-419 (SHOTGUN)

- Is this really technomancer proof? I understand that the mechanism is completely mechanical, but how about the rest?
- Clockwork
- The action might be foolproof against hacking, but with all the other electronics you could just reset the safety or set the ammo skip system to empty the magazine in a harmless manner.
- Puck
- Why would Wuxing test a Renraku weapon for their security teams? Don't they have their own manufacturing arm?
- /dev/grrl
- They were tested, but nobody bought many of them. The trials were intended to see if Izom's electronics would be acceptable in a future platform. They found a myriad of issues with the feed system; the unique magazine is more a solution that was looking for a problem than something truly essential.

LASER SIGHT

IZOM PHP-131

IZOM PHP-131

The PHP-131 was developed for smaller shooters who desire the firepower of a larger handgun but cannot handle the weight and bulk of such a weapon on a regular basis. The PHP-131 is manufactured with a modern composite frame using as few heavy components as possible. Modern construction techniques have also made the weapon a favorite of protective details, since the gun can pass through simple metal detectors without issue (we are aware of the complaints of our protective-services clients about this issue, and we are working to resolve it to our mutual satisfaction). Users should be aware, however, that the gun cannot pass through the chemical sniffers and backscatter radar used in modern screening techniques. The weapon is also equipped with a laser sight as a lightweight aiming aid.

- It's not that much lighter than a Predator IV. It seems like the whole weight issue in the write-up is just an effort to get someone to pay more for a lesser pistol.
- Riser
- The ability to slip by primitive security is not a bad thing. A lot of minor facilities are not up to snuff on security, and a minor adjustment courtesy of your resident hacker means your weapon slides through.
- Fianchetto
- If your hacker has spoofed the system, why bother with leaving it on at all? They should be able to let you pass and then rewrite everything.
- Slamm-O!
- The more you change a system, the more people look around afterwards. Subtle changes can look like mis-calibrations or operator error, allowing you repeat access with minimal risk.

IZOM RP-71

Izom's latest entry into the small automatic weapon market, the RP-71 has been developed with additional assistance from Ultimax and the lessons learned during the development of the Ultimax 70. The RP-71 is capable of suppressive fire, and it has been ruggedized for rough handling. The clearly marked controls are designed for use by less-trained operators with a minimal amount of electronic aid.

- Warning for anyone wanting to bring this into humid climates: The ammunition is less reliable after it gets the least bit wet. I think the quality control is suspect.
- Marcos
- I can testify regarding sales to less-trained operators. They have been springing up in the hands of a couple of the smaller security operations in Africa. They're using it to replace the Colt Manhunters that they used to issue.
- Am-Mut
- I think I would prefer the Manhunter—at least with that, the target goes down and stays there.
- Riser
- Different tool for different use. Security mooks are there to slow down an attack until the QRT shows up. In that scenario, suppressive fire and wide bursts are more effective than precision fire they couldn't use well anyway.

A top-of-the-line semi-automatic pistol intended for law enforcement and military personnel, the HP-49B is a recent modification of the original design remodeled for smoother double-action operation and a slide redesigned for a smoother draw. TERRACOTTA ARMS CARAVAN

TERRACOTTA ARMS CARAVAN

The Caravan is a magazine-fed semi-automatic rifle intended for game hunters and as well as those who are concerned about home defense. We have seen particular interest in this product among our customers in the rural areas of the Sioux Nation, which is a landscape well suited to the weapon's strengths. The Caravan features a telescopic sight to improve the accuracy of long-range shooting, and a thermal suppressor option has been made available at the request of law enforcement and security teams that use the model as a tactical marksman's weapon.

- A poor man's sniper rifle, just like most the weapons in this category. The gas tube system clogs fairly easily; I figured they would have used a piston system for the reliability.
- Riser
- You have to remember the intended end user. These are supposed to be used for hunting or home defense, not prolonged firefights where the weapon will go hours without being cleaned. These are often owned by people who view gun maintenance as a regular, pleasurable activity.
- DangerSensei
- The strange thing is they've been making a big push to sell this to the Yakut, but they didn't optimize it for arctic operations.

- The concept of a folding submachine gun has been around for almost a hundred years. There was even one in an ancient 20th century vid.
- Sunshine
- The Mordred is fairly easy to conceal in a vehicle if there isn't any ammunition in it. Most security sensors will bypass it if you attach it the gas tank or some other solid piece of metal.
- Traveler Jones
- I've seen a news team use them for both security and for filming footage in the field. They look different enough that some of the combatants don't recognize them as a weapon, but the trideo electronics let the reporters gain some footage and then suppress anyone who attacks them.

Note: The higher availability/price reflects a purchase with the silencer included.

- These have been getting dropped in a few interesting places the last few months. A number of buyers have started carrying them as a last-ditch defense.

TERRACOTTA ARMS AM-47

The AM-47 is a large weapon intended for a metahuman operator, one of the first of its kind offered on the Asian market. Terracotta is determined to ensure its products meet the needs of all market segments, and we intend to offer more products for these valued customers in the future.

The AM-47 features a comprehensive recoil suppression system and an extended barrel to increase the weapon's effective range. The unique drum magazine allows a larger-capacity magazine that can be used while the shooter remains in a prone position. The AM-47 fires a new high-powered cartridge from the recently developed Critical™ line of ammunition. The promise of continued software support ensures the weapon will not become incompatible with the latest interface protocols, and the integrated electronics' robust architecture will enable the AM-47 to compete on the battlefield for decades to come.

- Mihoshi Oni
- If eliminating non-human metas is indeed their desire, then selling weapons to those populations might be a viable way to help that process. Several UCAS studies have indicated the most likely killer of a non-human is another non-human.

ULTIMAX 47

ULTIMAX 47

The 47 is the newest infantry rifle offered by Ultimax. It is a relatively simple design intended to serve the dual purposes of introducing the principles of long-range shooting to trainees and serving as the primary weapon for temporary personnel who require a firearm with limited suppressive abilities. The weapon's limited electronics suite encourages trainees to develop and rely on their own abilities. The laser sight also assists in close-quarter scenarios, allowing the operator to quickly bring the weapon to bear on a target and ensure a first round hit.

BATTLE RIFLE

(from War!, p. 154)

A battle rifle is an up-powered version of an assault rifle. It fires heavier caliber rounds than an assault rifle and offers better accuracy at longer ranges. It is heavier than an assault rifle, which helps compensate for the added recoil of the larger round. A battle rifle's role lies between that of an assault rifle and a sniper rifle. Battle rifles use sporting rifle ranges and can take any modification or accessory available to assault rifles.

Battle rifles require the Automatics skill to use effectively.

- I'm not sure how a weapon that only fires three round bursts can be considered suppressive fire. Most organizations that adopt weapons with burst-only features are trying to conserve ammunition.
- Riser
- While it might not lay down a large quantity of bullets, when an entire fire team is shooting 8mm bullets at you and your friends, it gets suppressive enough to be effective.
- Black Mamba
- 8mm bullets were last used as service rounds over a century ago. Does anyone even still manufacture it?
- Beaker
- A Renraku subsidiary started producing the rounds three weeks before the rifle was released to the public. Nothing like supplying a customer demand you created. They also offer a full selection of types for those who can't live without their APDS or EX rounds.
- Mr. Bonds

ULTIMAX 68

The Ultimax 68 is an assault rifle intended for users who require a modicum of stealth when they engage a target. Since the weapon was introduced four years ago, it has been selected as the quiet entry weapon of numerous Special Forces and SWAT teams on the Asian continent. Ultimax is now pleased to announce that the weapon is available for wider distribution now that the initial contracts have been fulfilled. The weapon and its suppressor have passed extensive trials in the Arabian Desert, and it is expected to be selected as the latest addition to the arsenal of the Arabian Caliphate.

The weapon is compatible with a number of modification kits, which Ultimax can install for users who order through their Customer Service Representative, or they can be installed by a qualified facility at the user's discretion. The weapon's folding stock allows users maximum freedom of movement when operating in an urban environment.

Standard Upgrades/Accessories: Folding Stock, Sound Suppressor

- It's a bare-bones weapon. The suppressor is only good for a magazine or two before the performance noticeably degrades.
- Riser
- Any team worth their salt builds in weapon upgrades as part of their bid package. Of course, any team with a real budget finds a different weapon.

- A spray and pray weapon at best. The ballistics is crap, and something in the gas operating system design reduces the muzzle velocity.
- Riser
- The laser sight burns through batteries pretty quickly but can withstand a lot of banging around. It might not be a very good weapon, but it works well enough for militia troopers.
- Black Mamba
- I'd like to know which units have picked these up as their primary service weapon. I'm betting they are small outfits looking to make a quick buck and then move on.
- Picador

NEMESIS ARMS PRAETORIAN

The Praetorian is a heavy, sturdy weapon intended for users who want the option to make combat up close and personal on the right occasions. The weapon was originally produced for ceremonial duties by Nemesis Arms' Custom Works Division, and after the successful completion of the contract, Nemesis' Board decided to offer the Praetorian to legal purchasers worldwide.

Nothing about the weapon is built for show. The blade is not just ceremonial, but capable of withstanding regular use as a melee weapon. It uses a heavily reinforced recoil operation to ensure reliability in hostile climates and after heavy use. The underbarrel blade can be modified with an array of different decorative etchings; please indicate your preference when ordering.

- The security features are easy enough to remove with a tag eraser, as the security RFID is not critical to the weapon's operation. In fact, the weapon is free of electronics except for the chip.
- Beaker
- Erasing the chip is helpful under some circumstances, but if you are using it as a prop in an effort to impersonate certain security troops, I would suggest leaving it operational until you decide to go dark. Law enforcement can make random sweeps for the chip, and you'll get their attention if you are carrying a weapon without it.

SHIAWASE ARMS COPERNICUS

SHIAWASE ARMS COPERNICUS

Originally designed to fulfill European military contracts, the Copernicus has been selected for use by Portugal and Spain for issue to select units of their armed forces. The Copernicus' features include an underbarrel smartlink with a safe target system and an advanced safety. The weapon is capable of operating in a variety of different environments under standard combat conditions. The weapon has undergone extended trials in Desert Wars Gobi, and the design has been updated to reflect user suggestions. Shiawase's dedication to producing reliable products is exemplified by the Copernicus' continued excellence.

SHIAWASE ARMS CARP HUNTER

SHIAWASE ARMS CARP HUNTER

The Carp Hunter was the launch item for Shiawase's Stream™ firearm line. The weapon is intended for those who enjoy sport shooting with a longarm. The weapon's enhanced ergonomic features are geared toward the recreational shooter and are not encumbered with the advanced electronic features common with a combat weapon. The Carp Hunter has been successfully introduced on the American, Asian, and European continents; we expect the weapon will be offered in Africa by the third quarter of this year.

The weapon has several ergonomic features catering to the casual shootist. It has been equipped with a flash suppressor to keep the shooter's vision clear. The composite frame reduced the weight enough to make it viable for government-sponsored youth marksmanship programs, while the shock-absorbing stock minimizes the unpleasant effect of recoil.

HIGH-POWER CHAMBERING (P. 156, WAR!)

This modification alters the chamber of the firearm to use larger high-power rounds (see below). A weapon with this modification can only fire high-power rounds. High-Power Chambering is incompatible with the hyper-velocity modification.

HIGH-POWER ROUNDS

High-Power Rounds use a more powerful (and more expensive) propellant than normal rounds. These rounds require a special chamber modification to the firearm. High-Power Rounds impose a -2 dice pool penalty when fired due to excess recoil.

The Tactical Model 71 is a compact weapon with many advanced features to facilitate its use in combat conditions. The Model 71 is constructed on lightweight polymer and alloys, just like all members of the Stream™ family. The weapon has a removable carrying handle, collapsible stock, and foregrip to allow the user the maximum number of carrying options. The integral smartgun link and associated Safe Target System eliminates most causes of friendly-fire incidents and permits more efficient use of firepower in close-quarter battle.

The weapon has also been strengthened to withstand sudden shocks and blows, allowing the user to traverse difficult terrain without worrying about their weapon's reliability. This ruggedness, along with the caseless ammunition and the electronic firing system, ensures the weapon is virtually environment proof.

ONOTARI ARMS DEATHDEALER™ AMMUNITION MK I

Onotari Arms is pleased to announce the release of the first practical self-guided small-arms ammunition. The Deathdealer™ ammunition is now available to purchasers with a valid End User Certificate. The rounds are guided by heavily miniaturized thermographic seekers and maneuver with pop-out micro fins. This allows the round to subtly correct the round's trajectory closer to the center of mass of the largest heat signature in the seeker's field of view. While current technology is incapable of directing a round around protective cover in the comparatively short distances typical of small arms engagements, the Deathdealer™ increases the efficiency of security forces armed with them and minimizes the number of stray rounds fired in any given scenario.

Deathdealer™ ammunition is available in a number of different calibers; please contact your Sales Representative to determine availability. Due to high demand, Onotari Arms cannot offer these rounds under the Instant Arms™ delivery program.

- Holy shit! Do these actually work? If so, I so need a few thousand rounds. The indigs will never know what hit them.
- Picador

- They work, in a limited way. The fins can move the bullet from an arm to the shoulder, but not much more than that. If you are a long-range headshot kind of guy, you might find more rounds landing in the upper torso.
- Beaker

- I have a half-dozen of my regulars begging for every round I can get, and it's not easy. So far I've managed two pistol magazine's worth, and the cost is staggering. Street price is almost one hundred nuyen a round for the pistol rounds, and just forget about getting assault rifle rounds in a reasonable amount of time.
- Red Anya

- I know someone who tried to hijack a truckload near Ankara last week. S-K finished killing off his relatives yesterday. They are coming down hard on anybody who tries to get this on the black market. Be careful, Red.
- Am-Mut

- There is already mention of a Mk II, but they seem to be having problems with it. The increased accuracy is reducing the mass of the round so much that it is limiting the amount of kinetic energy transferred to the target.
- Beaker

- Notice there aren't any of these rounds made for machine guns and anti-materiel rifles? I figured the larger-caliber rounds would be better suited for this type of thing.
- Sticks

- Dragons always keep something for themselves. S-K is likely keeping those for internal use.
- DangerSensei

Deathdealer Ammunition Mk I

The Deathdealer round confers a +1 dice pool modifier to ranged combat tests. The shooter still must have a line-of-sight to their target, as the round is incapable of sharp turns or other radical movement to engage unseen targets. This modifier is negated if the target is within the effective range of an area jammer (p. 329, SR4A) as the jammer interferes with the round's guidance package. If the ammunition is fired as part of a burst or full auto attack, the entire burst must consist of the guided ammunition or the benefit is lost.

The Deathdealer round is available for Heavy Pistols, SMGs, Assault Rifles, and Battle Rifles.

ONOTARI KALI

ONOTARI ARMS KALI

The Kali is Onotari's newest addition to the arsenals of paramilitary forces worldwide. The weapon features a robust action, ensuring the weapon can fire no matter how roughly it has been handled by its operator or how long it has been since it was cleaned. Derived from some of the most reliable weapons of the last century, the Kali's frame has been reinforced and encased in advanced polymers to withstand the damage modern combat can inflict.

- "Withstand impact" is not an exaggeration. I saw a yokel pick one up after its owner was killed by a mortar blast. He was up and shooting in under five seconds. They definitely built a tough one.
- Picador
- They can take a beating, but accuracy suffers horribly. Try making a decent long range shot with one—the action has enough give to make accuracy past 150 meters almost impossible.
- Marcos
- This is really market competition for the AK-97 Carbine. It's tougher than the rifles it was derived from. I think Kalashnikov would be proud.

ONOTARI JP-K49

JP-K49

The JP-K49 is a recent design that has been fielded by United Nations peacekeepers in Poland. Members of the force were issued prototypes of the rifle, and their feedback proved exceptional to the weapon's final design. The JK-K49's distinctive styling is heralded by many of its users who strongly contend that intimidation is an important part of the peacekeeping mission.

The weapon is manufactured with an integral optical sight and multiple recoil reduction features. The weapon has been optimized for long-range engagements and armor-piercing ammunition.

The L-493 was originally commissioned by Greece to arm their minotaur conscripts with a weapon that would fit their stature and fully utilize their impressive physique. The L-493 is heavily constructed to withstand usage by strong operators, although advanced composites have reduced the weight enough so that the weapon can be wielded by smaller users.

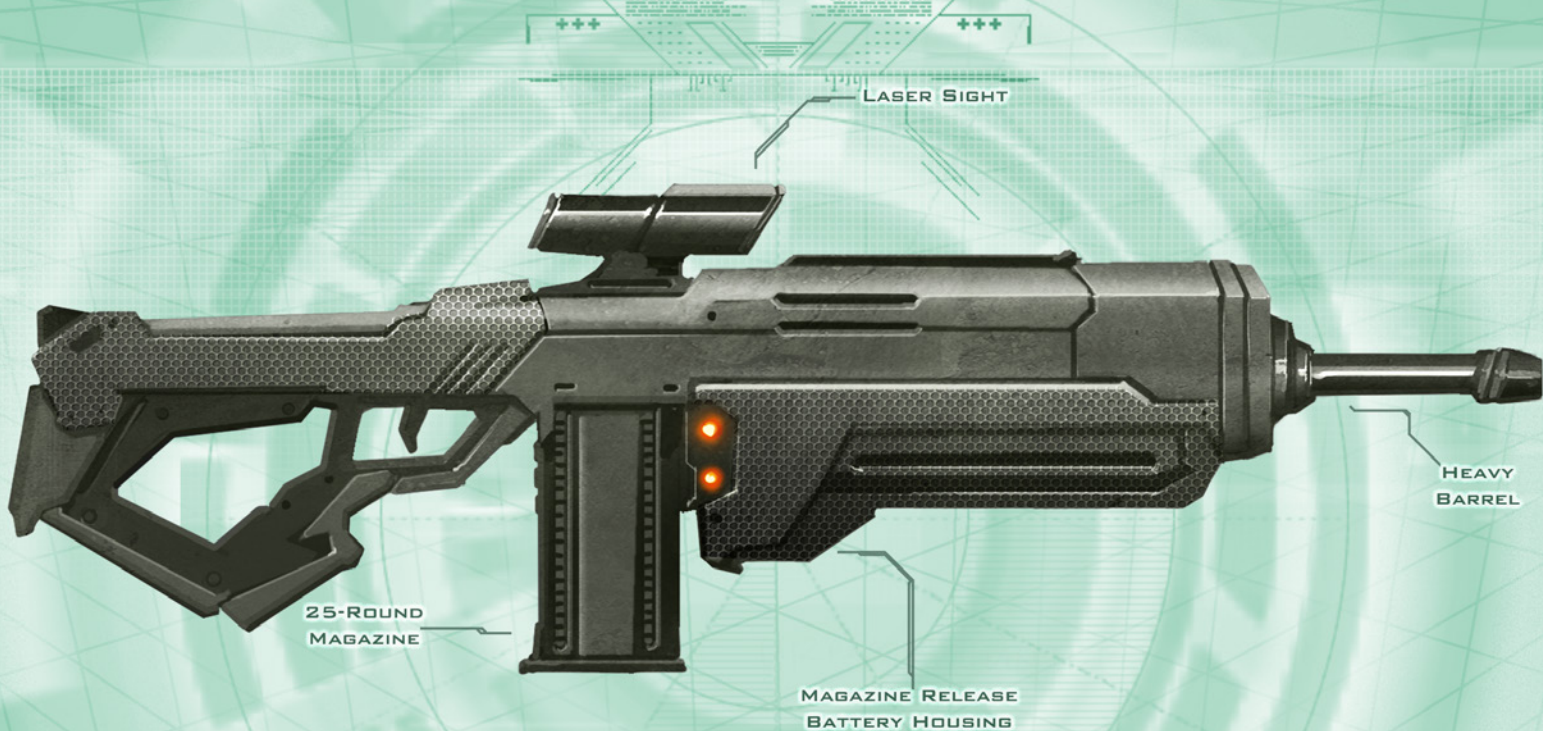

The L-493 is constructed with an imaging sight that provides enhancement while also connecting to the operator's PAN.

- There is a trideo of a minotaur squad going through close-combat training with these. They broke almost every dummy on the course and then went to shoot qualification. They were fairly impressive for a bunch of conscripts.

ONOTARI URBAN HUNTER

ONOTARI URBAN HUNTER

The Urban Hunter is Onotari Arms' ultimate expression of a high-powered small arm. The rifle is designed to be a versatile weapon for all manner of military and security forces, with extensive testing conducted by teams protecting pipelines through Kurdistan and Iraq. The weapon utilizes caseless ammunition technology to help reduce the recoil generated by the Dragonfire™ rounds. The weapon also features a laser sight as an aiming aid and has attaching points for more advanced electronic options.

THE MOM & POPS

This is where I dumped the small manufacturer's weapons. I managed to get the catalog descriptions from Cavalier on some of their latest gear. I also skimmed through some advertisements from third-party manufacturers who are trying to make something besides Ares knock-offs. The last entry is something Riser sent me a scan of from the Redmond Barrens. Enjoy and try not to poke an eye out. —Glitch

- Cavalier Arms is primarily distributed through North Am for those of you interested in their stuff, but a couple of these are made by an outfit in Euskal Herria. So there is European availability for those of you who operate in that region.

- Everyone criticizes an entrepreneur until they make an impact. I deal in weapons, which means I provide others the tools to make impacts regularly. But Ares doesn't like how I give bulk discounts, so a partnership may not be in the works.

CAVALIER ARMS LANCER

Cavalier has released the Lancer to law enforcement agencies in North America as the ultimate breaching tool. The Lancer is a semi-automatic shogun with an underbarrel grenade launcher. The weapon's accessories are designed to give the police operative the maximum number of options possible. The weapon is equipped with a bipod to help users maintain accuracy when using solid or specialty ammunition. The weapon's structure is reinforced to withstand the shock of sudden impacts and fragments from breaching charges.

- Police actions tend to be short raids rather than prolonged shootouts. Also, the close-quarter nature of a raid usually means the cop transitions to a handgun rather than reload. The more interesting question is whether the grenade launcher should be CS or flash-bang.
- Black Mamba

CAVALIER SHERIFF

LANYARD LOOP

CAVALIER ARMS SHERIFF

The Sheriff is the latest large-bore revolver released by Cavalier Arms. The weapon utilizes a larger caliber round than the Deputy, trading rate of fire for harder-hitting rounds. After extensive user testing, the revolver has been reinforced with high-strength steel alloys to help maintain reliability with the high-powered ammunition. Cavalier does not recommend the use of experimental explosive ammunition with the Sheriff due to unpredictable effects at flight terminus.

The weapon's electronics were designed for integration with an operator's PAN. Its triggerless design ensures the weapon can only be activated by its intended user, while the lanyard loop ensures the weapon never falls too far from the user's body. The smartlink helps mitigate the recoil's effect on accuracy and allows the weapon to serve as a sensor in a tactical network.

Standard Upgrades/Accessories: High-Powered Chamber, Melee Hardening, Smartlink, Trigger Removal

- I've seen demos of high-powered explosive ammunition; it works fine. Cavalier was concerned with the round exiting the target before detonation at close range. It's only happened twice to me so far, and at that point it really doesn't matter to the target if the explosive went off.

CAVALIER DRAGOON

CAVALIER ARMS DRAGOON

The Dragoon is the first purpose-designed small-caliber automatic pistol intended for larger metahumans. The Dragoon's ergonomics are designed to match the hands of trolls and orks to a greater degree than traditional firearms. The individual finger cuts are spaced so they match an average trolls' fingers. The weapon's action has been finely machined, with each pistol required to pass over a hundred quality checks prior to being authorized for sale.

CHARTER ARMS CURSE

CHARTER ARMS CURSE

The Curse is a uniquely designed assault cannon intended to support small military teams on short-duration missions. The weapon has a long stroke action to help users minimize the effect of recoil. The weapon's large magazine capacity allows the user to provide effective fire on point targets while the rest of the team maneuvers to take the target by enfilade. Charter Arms has also installed a low-light vision aid, allowing the weapon to function as a node in the team's tacnet and ensuring successful operations in all environmental conditions.

- Sticks
- The weapon seems to have a decent production pace, but finding where they go is a challenge. Nothing is listed in their tax filings, and Euskal Herria has rather lax enforcement of international weapon-exporting laws.
- Mr. Bonds
- The magazine capacity is limited, but the people that carry it tend to be able to carry enough magazines that it isn't an issue. I saw a troll in Berlin carrying a dozen strapped to the front of his armor vest. It was a sight straight from a low-budget action trid.

BARRENS SPECIAL

BARRENS SPECIAL

The Barrens Special is not made by any recognized manufacturer, but there have been a number of similar weapons collected by Knight Errant SWAT operations over the past month. The weapon is a small-caliber revolver with an attached blade, allowing the user to continue to fight after their ammunition has been expended. The majority of these weapons have appeared in the hands of juvenile offenders and completely destitute squatters.

Forensics has identified a number of consistent tooling marks on the weapon's parts, leading to the assumption that a street-level manufacturer is producing these weapons in the Seattle area. If the facility is found, retrieval of sales records will be crucial in locating all of the weapons, as they lack the mandatory RFID chips included in all legally produced weapons. The manufacturer is currently wanted for tax evasion, operating without a business license, manufacture of an illegal firearm, and, due to the quality of the weapon, littering.
