Foreword

This edition of "Grim's Amazing D100 Tables" deals with those times where a player has been called to a will reading, and may have inherited some things from a deceased relative or friend.

These things may be worthless and even troublesome, or possibly life changing. one thing that can be sure is that many of these inheritances can provide rich pickings for a crafty GM, opening up many story hooks and encounters not usually found on an everyday basis.

It is up to the GM to determine who else is present at the time of reading, or if any additional drama may be gleaned from such situations, this will just provide the contents of the will. Included too are a template will sheet for GM's to use as a prop. With any luck, those clever enough could create entire sessions just from the inspiration contained here, so good luck with your own will readings and good luck to your players also, with some of these entries they will be cursing the day they even attended the reading...
