FOREWORD

Gaelic isn't quite right, but it is close. These tables can generate for Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

This document is designed to be an aid for players and referees alike. Naming is important in any culture, and even in our fantasy we like consistency; how many times while adventuring have you encountered an NPC with your character's first name or last name?

Why use real world names for a fantasy campaign? Cultural familiarity: If your character journeyed to England and met a man named Pierre whom your Game Master described as having a thick accent, you'd be inclined to think he was an immigrant. But if your character met Pandrolo in Gaulienne and he had a thick accent, you might be misled into thinking that all the people in Gaulienne spoke Common poorly or that poor Pandrolo had a low intelligence score.

This also means that if you need a spy, the PCs might learn that "Peter Adams" is really "Pierre Amonett". Additionally, some non-Gaelic names and surnames do appear in these tables, to add a foreign spice to the names generated.

A second good reason to use real world names is that there are so many. In the Gaelic Tables, I have more than 1500 female names, more than 1000 male names, more than 7500 surnames (not including an excess of 1800 place names) and more than 800 nicknames for each gender. Player Characters need never be forced into rolling on these tables, although they might want to look at or roll on them at their discretion. PCs need never be forced to accept a name or nickname just because the dice rolled it.

Some nicknames are not positive and are used to imitate nicknames in society. Use at your own discretion and disregard any you find offensive.

Barbarians are apart from society, so maybe you want Wulfric the Barbarian in a Germanic area or maybe you want to make up Ugabooga as your barbarian; if you're a barbarian, your name is not likely to fit society anyway, so go ahead.

Wizards, Sorcerers and Druids are notable exceptions. Who questions that Merlin doesn't have a surname? Who cares? By the same token, Harry Houdini was born Eric Weiss, and he made his new Surname his Wizard name.

History also gives us identifiers (as in "of place name") and nicknames as parts of names. Throughout the middle ages an identifier/nickname was tied not only to kings, but to various members of the nobility in many European countries at various times.

History is not the only place where these identifiers and nicknames occur. In the Arthurian Legends we have Lancelot du Lac (of the lake) and Morgan le Fay. Tolkein gave us Gandalf the Gray. If our own legends and fiction support such, there's room for it in our game play.

I recommend generating a dozen or so names of each gender before play begins and keep that list on hand for any occasion. Appendix B, the Open Game Content has a ready made list to get you up and going.

Gaelic names are ideal for the Island Nation of Gaelire on Terra Ferax.

DICE ROLLING

In this document, d00 indicates using percentile dice (a pair of ten-sided dice) rolled to produce a number from 1-100. One die is designated as the "tens spot", while the other is the "ones spot"; a pair of 0s (00) indicates a 100 was rolled.

No dice? No Problem! There are many Java-based die rollers (Java works with Sun-OS, Linux, Mac, Pc, etc.) on the web; the one at Irony games is excellent: <http://irony.com/igroll.html>

INSTRUCTIONS

Decide on the gender of the person you're generating a name for. Roll (or choose) from the name configuration table. If a Middle name is indicated, roll (or choose) an additional time from the First name tables.

Nicknames, Firstnames and Middlenames are rolled by gender.

Gaelic Female (first and middle) names begin on the next page. Gaelic Male (first and middle) Names are found on page 52. Surnames begin on page 128.

NOTES ON NAMES

These names are a collection of Gaelic, Celtic and mythological names from the British Isles (including Ireland). Dallas was a popular cross-gender name (it means wise); Africa (or variations of it; named for the continent), according to several sources, was popular as a lady's name in the Middle Ages as well. The name Doctor was probably inherited from the Latin docere (to teach or to show) and the name Doctor implies a learned scholar, not a medical examiner. Mc[whatever] as first name; it did happen and still does today (McDonald Carey was a actor in Commanche Territory, 1950). As always, if you do not like a name (i.e. "Dallas makes me think of Texas and it just can't be right..."), do not use it.

SURNAMES

Most surnames are patronymic (they come from the father); some are nicknames, some were occupational and some are locative.

Locative placenames are all but non-existent as surnames for most Gaelic people, but as they were in use in England and on the main continent, I can't rule out the possibility that I just haven't come across one. Since it was so popular during the Medieval period, there's no reason your character could not have an 'of' place name for a surname.

Linguistically, "of" is na or a modification to na based on the gender of the noun and whether it is plural or singular (and the Gaelic language you're speaking, of course). Since trying to decide if the Gaelic is masculine or feminine and singular or plural, I recommend bastardizing them all to a simple na unless you have fluency and know better. However some of you are dying for linguistic rules (I'm using a public domain – very old – copy of MacFarlane's for these rules). The following "na" rules are for Scots Gaelic (Goidelic uses different linguistic rules) The Scots Gaelic is na for the english phrase "of the" for feminine singular nouns unless there's a vowel involved and then it becomes na h- (na h-Eiphit means "from Egypt"; Uamhas na h-Ifrinn; means "Monster from Hell"); in masculine cases a na 'm is used before the consonants p,b,f, and m (singular; the plural form is 'nam), while a na 'n is used before vowels and other consonants if singular (as in Tir na 'nOg; "land of the young") or 'nan if plural and a masculine vowel/other consonant! Now doesn't just using na seem a bit more simple?

For random determination, there is only a 1% chance (1 on percentile dice) of having a placename surname (see the next table), otherwise roll (or select) below on the Surnames table (page 128).

PLACES AS SURNAMES

In the Terra Ferax campaign, each map guide has a "Where Do I Come From" section, which will allow you to localize to that specific campaign map. The table below assumes you are using historic Earth as a background.

The following list provides some of the current places in the United Kingdom of which were in existence in the Middle Ages (Limmerick, Dublin, etc.). However, verifying that each and every one of these places was indeed in existence in the Middle Ages is beyond the scope this work.

The first d00 is for random determination of country and place; the second d00 is for places if you know which country you come from.
