FOREWORD

This document is designed to be an aid for players and referees alike. Naming is important in any culture, and even in our fantasy we like consistency; how many times while adventuring have you encountered an NPC with your character's first name or last name?

The main reason for this document was so that in my own campaign there would be a consistency, yet allowing variety. If your halfling runs into other halflings during game play, you might accidentally run into a long-lost cousin or more awkwardly, someone with your own name.

Player Characters need never be forced into rolling on these tables, although they might want to look at or roll on them at their discretion. PCs need never be forced to accept a name or nickname just because the dice rolled it.

Some nicknames are not positive and are used to imitate nicknames in society. Use at your own discretion and disregard any you find offensive.

For the players, peruse them looking for a good name only use dice as a last alternative. I can't count how many times someone generated a character, knowing the class and race, the kinds of initial items to buy and then just sat there...twitching, fidgeting and agonizing over a name for his latest masterpiece. Meanwhile the chorus of other players began the mantra, "Just pick a name; let's play!"

Hours later, Fred the dwarf was named.

For the Referee, this document gives you two entwined gifts: first not only can all your NPCs share a cultural naming scheme, but also you get the burden of naming a minor NPC who was never supposed to be anything more than scenery.

I recommend generating a dozen or so names of each gender before play begins and keep that list on hand for any occasion. Appendix B, the Open Game Content has a ready made list to get you up and going.

Now if you're in a pinch for a name, you can provide one easily and there can be some consistency in your names (it will sound like you have a complete culture for your humans and demi-humans).

DICE ROLLING

In this document, d00 indicates using percentile dice (a pair of ten-sided dice) rolled to produce a number from 1-100. One die is designated as the "tens spot", while the other is the "ones spot"; a pair of 0s (00) indicates a 100 was rolled.

INSTRUCTIONS

Decide on the gender of the person you're generating a name for. Roll (or choose) from the name configuration table. If a Middle name is indicated, roll (or choose) an additional time from the First name tables.
