

PARIS UNDERGROUND

Art by Gary (<http://artofgray.blogspot.com/>)

Technology: Although home to structures aging in the triple digits, Paris has wasted no time in springing into the modern age. The domestic economy has grown tenfold in recent years, leading to a surge of small and major companies vying for control over the finite workforce. The Metro has expanded its grasp to keep up with above ground urbanization. Any and every type of industry can find a niche in the economic web of this hyperactive city.

Environment: While the center skyline is dominated by the age-old Eiffel Tower, the rest of the city is occupied by newly built skyscrapers, each new one challenging the last in size. Although said to be a statement of national pride, no structure taller than the Eiffel Tower occupies the center due to a millennium's worth of catacombs cut through the bedrock. The River Seine cuts a curving path through the city and sporadic rainstorms interrupt otherwise clear days.

Society: The thriving economy has spawned a massive upper class of executives fighting viscosly for profits and vice versa, an even larger lower class of laborers selling their work for the highest bidder. Fortunes are made and lost daily, and the workers are subject to a constant flux of available jobs, sending some into a life of crime.
