VICTORIAN

VICTORIAN OCCUPATIONS

Victorian Occupations presents an alternative list of occupations to the list presented in the SRD. This product incorporates all of the previous Imperial Age product line to bring occupations up to date with the various types Imperial Age campaigns.

WHAT IS AN OCCUPATION?

In the context of the Imperial Age, "occupation" is a term of art. Occupations represent what a character has done prior to becoming a first level character. In a very real sense, an occupation is what the character did at "0-level." While some characters may continue in such occupations, many choose different careers by the start of the campaign.

When selecting an occupation, consider what your character did prior to the start of the campaign. Occupations are designed to round out a character concept, not provide a straitjacket. If you are playing a private investigator at first level, you need not take the Investigative occupation; perhaps your character grew up on the streets of London (criminal occupation) or served in the colonial army (military occupation).

SOCIAL CLASS AND OCCUPATIONS

Social classes were very important in Victorian society. Everyone knew their station and how to interact with those outside it. There are no hard rules for social class in the Imperial Age setting, as certain characters (and quite possibly the bulk of the campaign) may be outside of Great Britain's reach.

Many nations have differing rules regarding social class and indeed some nations, such as America and France, have no admitted social classes at all (Although, to be sure, social stratification occurs, even in these democratic societies).

That said, there is a strong presumption that most Imperial Age campaigns will be set in late Victorian London (and it is where the initial penny dreadful are set) and it is useful to have an idea of what occupations are appropriate for a particular social class. Thus, each entry will have letters after its title that designates the appropriate social class: (L)ower, (M)iddle, (U)pper. Combinations of these letters simply mean that the occupation is appropriate for all classes listed.

These designations are simply guidelines and there are always exceptions. A character with a Tribal occupation, for example, is typically considered lower class. However, if he is the chieftain of his tribe, he may actually be treated as upper class.

Shifting Classes

Some occupations allow a character from one social class to be raised (or lowered) to another. A character with the Celebrity occupation, for example, might have been born into a lower class family but his novels have sold well enough to thrust him into the middle class.

USING THIS PRODUCT WITH OTHER IMPERIAL AGE PRODUCTS

Victorian Occupations assumes that you have other products in the Imperial Age line necessary to run your campaign. Thus, this product lists some skills and feats that aren't included in the SRD. These skills and feats are marked with an asterisk. When using an occupation that includes a skill or feat unavailable to you, simply exclude it (the occupations are balanced with or without these optional skills and feats).

Also, not every occupation will be available in every Imperial Age campaign. There is no Aeronaut occupation in a historical campaign, for example, nor are their hedge wizards in an engines campaign. As Game Master, you are the final authority in determining appropriate occupations.

The Craft (engines) skill is a special case. If you do not have Engines, replace this skill with Craft (electrical) and Craft (mechanical).

LIST OF OCCUPATIONS

The following is a list of suitable occupations in the Imperial Age. Skills and feats found in other Imperial Age products are marked with an asterisk (*). The Builder and Gearhead feats are altered from the SRD; see Engines for details.

Bonus feats may only be taken if the character can meet the prerequisites at first level. This is very important in magickal campaigns, where the Magick Mastery feat might not be available until third level.

Academician (MU)

The academician is a preserver of knowledge. He is well-educated and very knowledgeable in a certain field of study. Academicians are generally found in libraries, museums, and universities, although a noble academician may have an extensive home library.

There is some overlap between the Academician and the Educator, as some Academicians are also teachers. The difference, however, lies in their technique. Academicians are excellent reservoirs of knowledge but have more difficulty imparting such knowledge than the Educator.
