THE EASTERN FRONT

Following the Second World War, the rural nations of Eastern Europe were torn apart by the recent conflict. Years later, after harvesting the charred skeletons of the ruined machines of war and learning of new engineering techniques, the founders of the new city of Icarus rose to conquer the heavens with towering walls, buildings and machines. The industrial revolution had reached Icarus in a staggering explosion of manufacture and new progress. The city itself, an organism of iron and smoke, now rivals any technological marvel of engineering from around the globe.

IMAGERY

Smoke plumes billowing from iron machines, ravaged natural land, ruins of old rural villages and towns, lumber yards to fuel machines, heavy air pollution, no nearby fauna

RESOURCES & TECHNOLOGIES

Smoke-powered engineering, dead war machines, personal suits of mechanized iron, vast neighboring forests, livestock, smoke extraction masks, deep mining, mechanized land vehicles
